A SEWATORIAL PLU RY.

The State Senate has a sparm. Some irreverent newspaper ventured to start the story that a fund of 345,000 had been firemen's salary through the Schate, and that Coggeshall-the irrepressible "Coggy"-and Raines and Roberts in had in consequence been of reat corvice in passing the bill.

Naturally the Senature are exercised over the insinuation, and desire "vindi cation." They always do want "vindication," and they always get it. If they were not certain to get it they would not want it. With Binghamton O'Connor as chairman of a bribery committee there is sure to be a searching (7) investigation.

Of course, it is supreme'v ridiculous to suspect the Gremen of the city of being capable of raising a fund to put a bill through the Legislature making a good thumping addition to their salary As soon might the members of the police force he suspected of such an imprope act. But in this instance the tharge made the more improbable from the absurd statement that Lou Payn was to look after the interests of the fundraising firemen. As if a statesman of Lou Payn's distinction would meddle with such business. Ridiculous: the way, isn't Lou Payn Mr.

It may cause some persons to wink the other eye when they hear that the Goulds are not residents of New York, and, so far as this city is concerned. are in a condition of pauperism here But, then, there is a wide difference between a tax assessment of ten millio dollars and one of about half a million dollars. "THE VALE OF AVOCA."

"The Vale of Avoca," Leonard Grove and Clay M. Greene's "romantic comedy now current at the Columbu Theatre, Harlem, is a distinct improve ment upon the run of Irish plays There are no evictions, no mortgage lifted from hapless cottages, and no villains in red coats. The play is, in fact, simple and not ineffective. Of course, it would be too much to ask as Irish hero not to wear velveteen knickerbockers or to sing songs about Nellie and Mayourneen and my sweetheart. No well-regulated constructor of Hibernian drama could be expected to make such a sacrifice. It would be like asking the villain in the conven tional five-act roarer not to wear takid gloves or smoke cigarettes. "The Vale of Avoca" the bone o contention is a mine in Colorado which the villain wants to secure, and be does horrible things to get it. He also runs away with Nellie Brennan, is betrothed to the velveteen knicker bookers. She discovers that the fasci nating viliain is more to her liking He abandons her later on, and her checylid is stolen from her, but a few years afterwards she meets the velveteen knickerbockers, which never grow old, and she is most warmly received. There are two long-los-cheeyild-ren in "The Vale of Avoca," and they spend a good deal of time rushing into their parents' arms. When poor Grace, the blind girl (I wonder why blind girls are so popular in pieces of this kind?), discovers that she is the the wealthy mine owner, she jump towards him, and he cries "Me cheeyild me poor suffering cheeyild!" She kisser his collar, which is always a pet kissplace on the stage. Then wronged Nellie has her child to find, and a simtlar scene is enacted.
